The Audigiers were Knoxvillians, who lived abroad for some 20 years and travelled widely. They collected many objects of art, among them Egyptian antiquities, photographs, and books relating to Egypt, which were donated to the University of Tennessee in 1932. Aside from the books which are in the University of Tennessee’s Library, the collection is now housed in the McClung Museum.

AMERICANS DISCOVER ANCIENT EGYPT

The enchantment of ancient Egypt has lured an unending number of people through the centuries to the shores of the Nile River. Wondrous monuments, works of art, and treasures of all variety have been uncovered from Egyptian sands. These discoveries have made many scholars ponder on the beginnings and development in the land of this great civilization.

About 3100 B.C., King Menes is believed to have united the two kingdoms of Upper (southern) and Lower (northern) Egypt. Thus began one of the world’s great dynasties and the onset of a rich culture lasting more than 3000 years. King Menes, also known as King Narmer, is generally credited with initiating one central government, a momentous occurrence at the threshold of the historic period that established a form of rule that lasted to the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great. Menes is believed the first pharaoh of Egypt and who, empowered by a bureaucracy of priests, merged the two lands. These holy men claimed that Pharaoh was the only mortal who could deal with the hundreds of gods to ensure that farmlands would remain fertile and the Nile would grant plenty from its life-giving waters.

As dynasties passed, each pharaoh directed architects and artists to erect and decorate numerous temples and monuments testifying to his or her greatness. As an elite class these rulers understood their position of advantage and maintained their place on the throne in general through benevolence and by taking care of their subjects. Thus, by this behavior they were ensured they would pass the final judgment after their death and be resurrected.

The people who worked to build Egypt into greatness were often of humble origins. Some were the men who were paid in beer, bread, beans and linen, who constructed the pyramids of Giza; architects and supervisors were handsomely paid from Pharaoh's
Pharaoh’s people grew grain for bread, fished, raised cattle, and hunted. In addition to the humble workers and the priests, there were artists, navigators, doctors, and astronomers among a multitude of others, all working to honor their king. Pharaoh lived in a fine palace, the noble class in spacious homes, and most ordinary Egyptians in one-story mud-brick dwellings.

Much of what we know about daily life in ancient Egypt is due to the dedicated efforts of Egyptologists around the world. The American involvement in Egypt has a long history, and American scholars continue to make major contributions to the understanding of this dazzling ancient culture.

EGYPTOLOGISTS, SCHOLARS, COLLECTORS, WRITERS, AND OTHERS IN EGYPT

In preparing this booklet for our trip to Indianapolis I was mindful of the exhibition theme created for “The American Discovery of Egypt.” It is offered as a supplement to our trip. As the list is long of those Americans, some foreign born, who have contributed their knowledge to the understanding of ancient Egypt it was only possible to mention those, now deceased, who made a significant and early impact on Egyptology and their publications. The choices of individuals are not all prominent figures, but all of them seemed worthy of inclusion. Sadly, due to space constraints their achievements in the text had to be in most instances shortened. I am indebted to Warren R. Dawson and Eric P. Uphill’s Who Was Who in Egyptology (London 1972) and to M. L. Bierbrier’s 3rd revised edition (London 1995) of that publication, from which much of the information for this booklet was drawn. Other sources are listed in the Selected Bibliography at the end. It is hoped that the following choices will be useful.

E.A.E.

Klaus Baer (1930-1987): Born in Halle, Germany, Baer studied Egyptology at the Oriental Institute, University of Chicago, where he received his Ph.D. in 1958. Baer excavated under Ahmed Fakhry at Saqqara and Giza and later at Hierakonpolis, where he was the Epigrapher. He was on the faculty at the University of California, Berkeley, 1959-1965, and went on to Chicago to become Professor and Chairman of the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations. Rank and Title in the Old Kingdom, 1960.

Oric Bates (1883-1918): An archaeologist who studied at Harvard University and became a member of the Egyptian Department of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. He took part in two Nubian expeditions and explorations in the Sudan. The Eastern Libyans, 1913.

James Henry Breasted (1865-1935): An important Egyptologist and orientalist and one of the world's great scholars. His early career included work as a pharmacist and the study of Hebrew before entering Yale University. Breasted also studied Egyptology in Berlin under Adolf Erman and went on to prestigious posts at the University of Chicago, copied and arranged hieroglyphic inscriptions in various European museums, founded the Oriental Institute at Chicago, and became the director of the University of Chicago Egyptian Expedition, 1905-1907. During his life he received many academic honors. A History of Egypt, 1905; Ancient Records of Egypt, 5 volumes, 1906-1907.

Ludlow Seguine Bull (1886-1954): The Honorary Curator of the Egyptian Collection of the Yale University Museum, Connecticut. After graduating from Yale University he studied law at Harvard University and served a short time as a lawyer. Bull went on to receive a Ph.D at Chicago, became an Egyptologist, and visited Egypt before joining the faculty at Yale University (1925-1936). He wrote numerous articles for publications of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, where he served as an Associate Curator. Rhind (Mathematical) Papyrus, 1929.

Janet Buttes (active 1890-1913): A gifted writer who visited Egypt numerous times from 1898 to 1912 with her relative Theodore M. Davis [see below]. The Queens of Egypt, 1908.

John Bryan Callender (1940-1987): An Egyptologist who studied at the Oriental Institute, University of Chicago and was awarded a Ph.D. in 1970 in Egyptian and Coptic languages. Callender was a faculty member at the University of California, Los Angeles and in 1986 became the Center Director of the American University, Cairo. Middle Egyptian, 1975.

Charlotte Rowe Clark (1897-1985): An Egyptologist who graduated from Mount Holyoke College, Massachusetts, was on the staff of the Detroit Museum of Art, Michigan and from 1921-1956 a Curator in the Department of Egyptian Art at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. For three years she was a member of the Metropolitan Museum's Egyptian expedition at Luxor, under Herbert Winlock (see below). Clark contributed several articles on a variety of museum objects for the The Metropolitan Museum of Art Bulletin.

John Ducey Cooney (1905-1982): A Bostonian who was a Curator of ancient art at the Brooklyn Museum from 1937-1963, after a B.A. in 1932 from Harvard University, Massachusetts, graduate work at Harvard University and at the University of Pennsylvania from 1932-1937. From 1963-1974 he was Curator of Ancient Art at the Cleveland Museum of Art, Ohio and later Research Curator there. Catalogue of Egyptian Antiquities in the British Museum, IV Glass, 1976.

Lorenzo Dow Covington (active 1902-1910): An independent excavator who dug at the Giza pyramids and nearby mastabas, 1902-1910. He also explored Wadi el-Kattar with J.E. Quibell, who worked under him as his assistant. His published reports are in Annales du Service des Antiquités de l'Égypte, Cairo, 6, 9, 10.

Eckley Brinton Coxe, Jr. (1872-1916): The philanthropist who made numerous visits to Egypt and the Sudan. In 1913–1916 he was Honorary Secretary of the American branch of the Egypt Exploration Fund. Coxe supported excavations in Egypt and Nubia. In 1912 he uncovered a large predynastic site at Abydos. He later financed an excavation at the palace of Merneptah at Memphis. From 1910 to 1916, he was President of the University Museum at the University of Pennsylvania.

Theodore M. Davis (1837-1915): A businessman and benefactor of Egyptology who first traveled to Egypt in 1899, where he financed numerous excavations including those in the Valley of the Kings. Davis discovered the tombs of Queen Hatshepsut, Thutmos IV, Siptah, and others. Co-author: The Tomb of Hatshepsut, 1906; The Tomb of Iouiya and Touyou, 1907; The Tomb of Queen Tiyy, 1910.
James Teackle Dennis (1865-1918): An attorney and Egyptologist educated at Johns Hopkins University. Dennis later visited Egypt, and in In 1905-1906 he was a volunteer worker under Edouard Naville at Deir el-Bahri. The Burden of Isis, 1910.

Walter Federn (1910-1967): An Egyptologist and philologist of Austrian-American descent who received his Ph.D at the Vienna Institute. Federn held posts at the Wilbour [see below] Library in Brooklyn, New York, and in the New York Public Library. His major work was the compilation of a bibliography of Egyptology for Orientalia.

Clarence Stanley Fisher (1876-1941): An archaeologist with a degree in architecture from the University of Pennsylvania in 1897. Fisher took an interest in the University Museum, Philadelphia, and their excavations. After receiving a Honorary doctorate in science from the University of Pennsylvania in 1924, he was appointed Professor of Archaeology in 1925 at the American School of Oriental Research. Fisher excavated at many Egyptian sites, worked under Reisner [see below], and discovered the palace of King Mernepthah at Memphis. Corpus of Palestinian Pottery.

Albert Gallatin (1880-1965): A new Yorker who became a well known collector of ancient Egyptian antiquities. His interests included other areas of collecting as well. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, benefited greatly when it received his extensive collection after his death.

George Robins Gliddon (1809-1857): An Egyptologist who was a U.S. Vice-Consul in Egypt. Glidden lectured on Egyptian archaeology at many educational institutions and became the first person in the United States to write about Egypt. Ancient Egypt, Her Monuments, Hieroglyphics, History and Archaeology..., 1843; Oitia Aegyptiaca: Discourses on Egyptian Archaeology and Hieroglyphical Discoveries, 1849; An Appeal to the Antiquaries of Europe on the Destruction of the Monuments of Egypt, 1849.

Lindsay Foote Hall (1883-1969): A draughtsman who studied architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Hall joined the Metropolitan Museum Egyptian Expedition as a draughtsman and worked for the Museum under Herbert Winlock during his excavations at various important sites including the excavation of the Tomb of Tutankhamun.

Walter Hauser (1893-1960): An archaeologist who was educated as an architect and joined the Metropolitan Museum Egyptian Expedition, which excavated at Deir el Bahari. Hauser prepared the master plan of the Malkata Palace of Amenhotep III at Western Thebes, covering some eighty acres. He was a member of the Metropolitan Museum of Art staff for almost 40 years.

Phoebe Apperson Hearst (1842-1919): A wealthy patron of archaeology who for a long time financed numerous University of California expeditions in Egypt. She financed the publications of the Hearst Expedition directed by Reisner [see below] in Egypt. There is now at University of California, Berkeley the Phoebe Hearst Museum of Anthropology.

William Randolph Hearst (1863-1951): A voracious collector of antiquities and owner of an enormous publications empire who inherited from his mother Phoebe Apperson Hearst [see above] a sincere fascination with Egypt. He collected many ancient Egyptian objects subsequently sold at auction.

Michael Allen Hoffmann (1944-1990): An archaeologist and anthropologist with a Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1971. Hoffmann held faculty posts at the University of Virginia, Western Illinois University and from 1982 at the University of South Carolina. His principal interest was Predynastic Egypt, and following his Hierakonpolis project, he curated a major exhibition, “The First Egyptians,” in 1988. Egypt Before the Pharaohs, 1979.

George Robert Hughes (1907-1992): An Egyptologist who received a B.D. in 1932 from McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago. His studied with Edgerton [see above] at the Oriental Institute, University of Chicago and in 1939 received his Ph.D. in Demotic language and literature. He then worked on the Demotic dictionary project, the Epigraphic Survey at the Temple of Khonsu and Babastite Portal at Karnak, and as the Field Director at the Temple of Medinet Habu, from 1949-1964. He was Professor Emeritus, Director of the Oriental Institute, and honorary member of the Deutsches Archaeologisches Institut and the Institut d’Égypte in Cairo. Medinet Habu V, VI, VII, VIII, 1957-1964.
Helene Juliet Kantor (1919-1993): An archaeologist with an interest in Art History who received a Ph.D. in 1945 from the University of Chicago under the Dutch Egyptologist Henri Frankfort. In 1948 she joined the faculty at Chicago specializing in Oriental languages and Near Eastern Art and Archaeology. Kantor was devoted to the chronology of ancient Egypt and its relations with Near Eastern cultures. The Aegean and the Orient in the Second Millennium B.C., 1947.

Henry Ludwig F. Lutz (1886-1973): Although born in New York, at an early age he studied theology in Germany. This interest continued and in 1911 he received a B.D. from the Chicago Lutheran Theological Seminary. Lutz did graduate studies at Yale University, Connecticut and received a Ph.D. in Semitics in 1916. His faculty posts included teaching Assyriology and Egyptology at the University of California, Berkeley, 1921-1954, where he was Emeritus Professor. Egyptian Statues and Statuettes in the Museum of Anthropology of the University of California, 1930.

Albert Morton Lythgoe (1868-1934): An Egyptologist who, with an M.A. from Harvard University in 1897, worked with Reisner [see below] in the Hearst Expedition at Naga ed Dér, 1899-1904. Lythgoe was Curator of Egyptian Art at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, 1906-1920, and Curator Emeritus, 1929-1933. Among his other accomplishments he excavated at Lisht, Thebes, and elsewhere. Lythgoe was the editor of The Predynastic Cemetery, N7000: Naga-ed-Dér, Part IV.

Edward Yorke McCauley (1827-1894): A naval officer and Egyptologist, and son of a U.S. Consul in Tripoli. At 13 years of age he spoke five languages and after a distinguished U.S. naval career became engrossed in the subject of ancient Egypt. A Manual for the Use of Students in Egyptology, 1883; Dictionary of the Egyptian Language..., N.S. vol. 16, 1890.

The Reverend Chauncey Murch (1856-1907): A missionary and collector who, after completing his studies at various theological seminaries, was sent in 1883 to Egypt by the United Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. While at Luxor he collected ancient Egyptian objects including a large group of important scarabs now in the British Museum, London.

Harold Hayden Nelson (1878-1954): An Egyptologist who received his Ph.D. in 1913 under James Henry Breasted [see above] at the University of Chicago. He taught at the American University in Beirut, Lebanon, where he chaired the Department of History, and was Field Director of the Oriental Institute Epigraphic and Architectural Survey at Luxor, 1924-1947. Nelson co-authored Medinet Habu, 1924-1928; Medinet Habu Reports, 1931; Work in Western Thebes, 1931-1933.

Charles Francis Nims (1906-1988): An Egyptologist and ordained Presbyterian Minister who received his B.D. from McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago. Nims began Egyptology in 1931 at the Oriental Institute, University of Chicago under Edgerton [see above] and Wilson [see below] in Demotic studies and received his Ph.D in 1937. Nims worked in Palestine, Saqqara, Luxor, etc. He was a member of the University of Chicago research staff and faculty, 1948-1972, and published a number of Demotic studies. Temple of Khonsu I-II, 1979-1981.

Richard Anthony Parker (1905-1993): A graduate of Dartmouth College, New Hampshire with a Ph.D in 1938 from the University of Chicago. In 1948 Parker became the first Charles Edwin Wilbour Professor of Egyptology at Brown University, Rhode Island and served as Chairman of the Department of Egyptology from 1948-1972. He specialized in ancient Demotic studies, mathematics, astronomy and chronology and was a founder of the American Research Center in Egypt and the Annual Egyptological Bibliography, The Calendars of Ancient Egypt, 1950.

Caroline Nestmann Peck (1921-1987): An Egyptologist born in West Virginia who received an M.A. at the Oriental Institute, University of Chicago in 1949. In 1958 she received a Ph.D. from Brown University, Rhode Island, where she became a Teaching Associate in Egyptology. Her thesis was Some Decorated Tombs of the First Intermediate Period at Naga ed-Deir.

Dorothy Williams Phillips (1906-1977): An Egyptologist and graduate of Wellesley College, Massachusetts who did graduate work at the Institute of Fine Arts of New York University and l’Institut d’Art et Archéologie at the Sorbonne, Paris. Phillips was a Carnegie Fellow in 1935. For many years she was a Curator in the Egyptian Department, Metropolitan Museum of Art and at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington. Ancient Egyptian Animals, 1942.

Garrett Chatfield Pier (1875-1943): An Egyptologist and Assyriologist who studied at Columbia University, New York, Egyptian and European museums and at Chicago University. From 1907 to 1909, as curator in Decorative Arts at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, he took trips to the Far East to buy for the Museum. Pier gathered a large collection of Egyptian objects during his life, some of which were acquired by Yale University, Connecticut in 1935. Egyptian Antiquities in the Pier Collection, 1906; Inscriptions of the Nile Monuments, 1908.

George Andrew Reisner (1867-1942): An eminent Egyptologist born in Indianapolis and educated at Harvard University, Massachusetts with an A.B.; A.M. and Ph.D. Reisner studied Egyptian under Kurt Sethe in Berlin and became an assistant in the Berlin Museum, 1895-1896. This was followed by a post at Harvard University as an instructor in semantics. From 1897 on his career followed the path of Egyptology with appointments in the Egyptian Museum, Cairo, and as Director of expeditions for the University of California, Berkeley, Harvard University, and the Egyptian government. Reisner was the Curator of the Egyptian Department, Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, and Professor of Egyptology at Harvard. Among the many sites he excavated were Deir el Ballas, Naga ed-Dër, Giza pyramids, Zawiya el Aryan pyramids, Gebel Barkal, Nuri, Kurru, and Semna. His excavation and recording techniques were exceedingly systematic. Reisner’s discovery of the tomb of Queen Hetep-Heres at Giza was a major find. The Hearst Medical Papyrus: Hieratic Text, 1905; The Development of the Egyptian Tomb, 1936; A History of the Giza Necropolis, Vols. I-II, 1942; The Tomb of Hetep-Heres, 1942.

Robert de Rustafjaell (?-1943): A collector who lived in Egypt, where he gathered ancient Egyptian objects. Part of his collection is in the British Museum. Palaeolithic Vessels of Egypt..., 1907; The Light of Egypt..., 1909.

Goetzl Selikovitsch (1863-1926): A specialist in linguistics and hieroglyphics. Born in Lithuania, he was known at an early age as a boy wonder in Hebrew and the Talmud. After completing linguistic studies at the École des Hautes Études in Paris in 1884, he went on to become Chief Interpreter to Lord Wolseley in Khartoum and studied languages in Africa and the Middle East. In 1887, he was a lecturer in hieroglyphs and Egyptology at the University of Pennsylvania. The Dawn of Egyptian Civilization, 1887.

Gustavus Seyffarth (1796-1885): An Orientalist, archaeologist, theologian and linguist with a Ph.D. from the University of Leipzig in 1819. Seyffarth knew the Coptic language as well as the Egyptian language. He visited numerous collections in Europe and made over 10,000 copies of inscriptions on Egyptian monuments. The results of his research produced De lingua et literis veterum Aegyptiorum..., Vols. I-II, 1825-1831. In 1854 he came to the United States as a faculty member at Concordia College in St. Louis in 1854 and in 1859 he began work at the Astor Library in New York. Fragments of The Canon of Kings at the Egyptian Museum in Turin, Italy, were arranged under his direction. Seyffarth was a great intellectual figure. A bibliography lists 113 books and articles and 31 in preparation. Rudimenta Hieroglyphica..., 1826; De Hieroglyphica Aegyptiorum scriptura, 1825.

Edwin Smith (1822-1906): An antiquities dealer who lived in Luxor until 1876. In 1862 two important papyri came into his possession. One he sold to Georg Ebers [see above] and he kept the other one. The Ebers papyrus was published by Georg Ebers as Papyrus Ebers: di Maasee und das Kapitel über di Augenkrankheiten, 1889 and the Smith Papyrus was documented by James Henry Breasted in the Edwin Smith Surgical Papyrus, 20., 1930.
Joseph Lindon Smith (1863-1950): An artist with exceptional powers of observation. In his paintings Smith copied ancient Egyptian wall paintings, statues, reliefs, furniture, etc., with great exactitude. His artistic skills caught the eye of Phoebe Apperson Hearst [see above] and George Resiner [see above] who engaged his services. Many Egyptian works were copied by him including those at the Temple of Sety I at Abydos; Temple of Isis at Philae; Abu Simbel and the Tomb of Ramose at Thebes. Joseph Lindon Smith, Tombs, Temples & Ancient Art, (ed.) Corinna Lindon Smith, 1956.

William Stephenson Smith (1907-1969): An Egyptologist born in Indianapolis with a Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1940. He also studied at the University of Chicago. While an Assistant Curator at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, he worked from 1930 to 1939 at the Giza pyramids under George Reisner [see above]. During W.W.II he served as a Lieut. Commander in the U.S. Naval Reserve between 1942-1946. Among his other posts were as Professor in the Department of Fine Arts at Harvard University and Director of the American Research Center in Egypt, Cairo. Ancient Egypt as Represented in the Museum of Fine Arts, 1942; The Art and Architecture of Ancient Egypt, 1958.

Sara Stevenson (1847-1922): Born in Paris, where she spent her early years. Stevenson was a founder of the Archæological Association of the University of Pennsylvania, the nucleus of the University Museum, and an energetic supporter of excavations in Egypt. She became the first Curator of the Egyptian and Mediterranean Department of the University Museum. Her efforts helped finance the work of William Flinders Petrie and in return the Egypt Exploration Fund, London gave excavated objects to the Museum. In 1897 she was a founding member of the American Exploration Society.

Mary Elizabeth Thomas (1907-1986): Born in Memphis, Tennessee she attended Hollins College, Virginia and received a B.A. from the University of Mississippi. Following a visit to Egypt in 1935 she was inspired to begin studies in Egyptology at the Oriental Institute at the University of Chicago. Thomas was a cryptographer during World War II delaying her studies, but in 1948 she received an M.A. at Chicago. Her main focus was the royal tombs of Thebes, where she excavated with colleagues. The Royal Necropoleis of Thebes, 1966.

Robb de Peyster Tytus (1878-1913): An archaeologist who received his M.A. in 1903 from Yale University, Connecticut. Tytus was in Egypt in 1899-1900 and from 1901 to 1902 he dug with the British Egyptologist Percy Newberry at the Palace of Amenophis III at Malkata at Thebes. Report on the Re-excavation of the Palace of Amenhetep III, 1903; The Robb de Peyster Tytus Memorial Series, 1917-1927, vols. I-V, (ed.) Albert M. Lithgoe [see above].
William A. Ward (1928-1996): An Egyptologist who was on the faculty Beirut College for Women and then at the American University of Beirut, Lebanon from 1959-1987, during years of political unrest. Ward received an M.A. in Egyptology at the University of Chicago and in 1958 a Ph.D. from Brandies University, Massachusetts in Semitic languages. In 1987 he joined the faculty of Brown University, Rhode Island, where he attracted many students to Egyptology. His publications and wide interests included the interconnections of the Ancient Near East, etymology and lexicography, scarab amulets, etc. Egypt and the East Mediterranean World, 1971.

John Collins Warren (1778-1856): A surgeon and the first Professor of Anatomy and Surgery at Harvard University, Massachusetts. In 1821, as a surgeon at the Massachusetts General Hospital, he made a careful examination of a mummy of the Ptolemaic Period that had been offered to the hospital for its museum. In one of the earliest inspections of its kind, Warren unwrapped the mummy and described his findings.

Frederic Cope Whitehouse (1842-1911): A lawyer and writer. After his studies in France, Germany and Italy, Whitehouse was called to the bar in 1871. During his life he became interested in Egypt and on one long visit he discovered the Wadi Raiyan in the Fayyum. Whitehouse associated this extensive depression in the desert with the ancient lake at Moeris. His exploration in the Fayyum prompted numerous writings on geology and ethnology.

Caroline Ransom Williams (1872-1952): An Egyptologist educated at Mount Holyoke College, Massachusetts, where she received a B.A. in 1896 and in 1912 an Honorary Ph.D. Williams studied under Adolf Erman in Berlin and was also a student of James Henry Breasted [see above] at the University of Chicago, where she received a Ph.D. in 1905. She taught at Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania, was a Curator at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and at the New York Historical Society. The New York Historical Society Catalogue of Egyptian Antiquities, Numbers 1-160. Gold and Silver Jewelry and Related Objects, 1924.

Edward Livingstone Wilson (1838-1903): A gifted photographer who photographed a large number of scenes at Philae and other sites in Egypt. In 1882 Wilson participated with the French Egyptologist Gaston Maspero and the German Egyptologist Emile Brugsch in their examination of the tomb, where the famous cache of royal mummies were found which are now in the Egyptian Museum, Cairo. “The Temples of Egypt” in Scribner’s Magazine 4, Oct. 1888.

Herbert Eustis Winlock (1884-1950): An Egyptologist who was awarded an A.B. degree from Harvard University, Massachusetts, an honorary degree from Yale University, Connecticut in 1933 and a Art.D. from Harvard University in 1938. From 1906 to 1931 Winlock excavated at various Egyptian sites for the Metropolitan Museum of Art at various sites including Lisht, Kharga Oasis, Thebes, and Deir el Bahari. Winlock became Curator of the Egyptian Department of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, serving from 1929 to 1939, and also was Director of the Museum from 1932 to 1939 and then Director Emeritus until 1950. Winlock was awarded the Chevalier of the Legion of Honour and the Orders of Leopold and the Crown. His writing and archaeological field work was of the highest standard. His finds at Deir el Bahari at the Hatshepsut and Mentuhotep temple sites and the models of daily life found at the tomb of Meket-Re at Thebes, and the Hekanakhte papers are among his many important contributions. The Treasure of El Lahun, 1934; Excavations at Deir el Bahari, 1911-1931, 1942; The Rise and Fall of the Middle Kingdom at Thebes, 1947; Models of Daily Life in Ancient Egypt from the Tomb of Meket-Re at Thebes, 1955.
